Keynote Speaker: Milton Goldberg, EdD

As a speaker and writer, Dr. Goldberg discusses the relationship between education excellence and the nation's social and economic well-being. He currently serves on the boards of the National Center for Adult Literacy at the University of Pennsylvania; the National Center on Time and Learning; C.S. Mott Foundation Advisory Board on Time and Learning; the Albert Shanker Institute; and Jones International University. Dr. Goldberg was former distinguished senior fellow at the Education Commission of the States and executive vice president of the National Alliance of Business, an organization of business leaders dedicated to the improvement of American education.

From 1977 to 1995, Goldberg held various leadership positions in the U.S. Department of Education. He was Deputy Assistant Secretary from 1979 to 1980. In 1981, he was named the executive director of the National Commission on Excellence in Education. The National Commission issued the landmark report, A Nation at Risk — a report generally credited with starting the nationwide education reform movement. As director of the Office of Research in 1989, he was instrumental in the development of the national education goals for President George H. W. Bush's education summit with the governors. In 1994, he was appointed the executive director of the congressionally created National Education Commission on Time and Learning. The Time Commission released the report, Prisoners of Time, which explored ways to improve student learning in and out of school.

Through his opening remarks, Dr. Goldberg will inject immediate relevance to the goals of the summit and will set the tone for the critical need to rethink how our schools and communities prepare our students for success in the classroom and the 21st century global economy.
